Go to any gathering of dairy producers in the state and you'll likely hear these 2 comments: "How can we get young people interested in the dairy industry?" and "We need trained, dedicated herdsmen and professionals to work in our industry." The Collegiate Dairy Career Opportunity Day and Tour, Nov 16-17, held at Sioux Falls in conjunction with the Central Plains Dairy Association's annual fall Dairy Business Meeting and Cow College was a learning activity designed to address these two concerns.

Twenty students from ISU and NICC-Calmar traveled to Sioux Falls to attend the CPDA Dairy meeting.) On Friday, they met with dairy producer "mentors", attended sessions and break-outs, and participated in an informal Job Fair. On Friday night, students took part in a Career-Builder seminar that featured a panel of young professionals serving the dairy industry, and a program about understanding personality profiles to enhance good working relationships in the work place.

On Saturday, students traveled by bus to visit dairy farms in NW Iowa. The five farms visited introduced students to the mixture of small, medium, and large farms present in NW Iowa, and to the specific jobs and work expectations associated with typical jobs on these farms. Judging by the enthusiastic reception of the students by the dairy producers and industry leaders attending the Central Plains Association event, and by the constructive criticism offered by the students, the stage is set to plan for this off-campus learning experience again next Fall.
