

Egyptian Elegance

Anthony Wilson, North Carolina State University, USA

Keywords: Elegant, drape

This elegant red Egyptian inspired gown with deep dramatic V cutouts at the back and on the sides has an asymmetrical hemline and leather neckline detail. It was created in May of 2012 for the elegant, sophisticated woman who is confident and likes making an entrance.

The design process for this garment included sketching to determine its silhouette. Draping pattern making techniques were used to create an original pattern followed by a prototype. The prototype was then fit on a model. After corrections were made to the pattern, the final garment was cut and constructed using matte jersey and leather.

