

Archival Issues Update

By Brandon T. Pieczko,

Archival Issues Editorial Board Chair, Indiana University

I hope this update finds you all well. The current issue of Archival Issues (vol. 41, no. 2) has been published and can be viewed online through our new digital repository: <https://www.iastatedigitalpress.com/archivalissues/issue/1167/info>. This newest issue features three articles on topics including conducting preservation assessment surveys of rare book collections, reexamining the contributions of pornographic materials to the archival record, and standards-based, primary source instruction in both K–12 and higher education classrooms. It also includes seven reviews of recent archival publications on a variety of topics important to the profession. As a reminder, this is the first issue of the journal to be published since MAC transitioned to a digital-only publishing model, so there will be no print edition going forward.

Our next issue, volume 42, number 1, is in progress. One article has been accepted by the Editorial Board for publication and is currently in the editing phase; eight publications have been sent out to reviewers by the publications review editor. We anticipate the issue will be published in winter 2022.

As always, we welcome article submissions on a wide range of topics related to archives and special collections and are always looking for new authors. If you have an idea for an article you would like to discuss, are thinking about reworking a successful conference presentation for publication, or have a manuscript ready to be reviewed, please consider submitting it to Archival Issues. You can contact me directly at bpieczko@iu.edu or visit our online submission portal (<https://www.iastatedigitalpress.com/archivalissues/submissions>). There is still time for your submission to be considered for our next issue!
